

Africa's Future Education

Dates: 5th - 6th September, 2011

Venue: Emperors Palace
Gauteng

"Success in education will determine the scope and extent of the country's future growth and development." Jacob Zuma

These are the words of the South African president whilst on a visit to Russia.

World Cup Soccer came and successfully went. We as Africans should continue the hype "around education for all" and make sure that the private sector support government in any endeavour.

Overview:

Education a key priority

Jacob Zuma highlighted education as a key priority for the South African government, saying success in education would determine the scope and extent of the country's future growth and development.

Our schools do not provide the skills to enter job market, leaving the incubation of business too late down the chain. Should we not be looking at filtering this kind of care into secondary education.

Education in Africa is poor and far behind the rest of the world. Too many of our schools have not been reached with the correct curriculum, and, those who have, do not have the money for books or the technology to access the work.

Much is said by government, but implementation, action, is way behind the needs of our youth.
